Refrigerating Gas Used Is Not Harmful General Electric Dealer Says There Is No Danger to Health

Methyl chloride, the deadly refrigerating gas that recently caused the death of fifteen Chicago residents, is not used in General Electric refrigerators, according to a statement issued by W. G. McWhinnie, distributor for G-E refrigerators in this district. "Sulphur dioxide is the gas used in General Electric refrigerators. It has a pungent odor, easily detected. It is non-poisonous, non-explosive, and non-combustible. In fact, sulphur dioxide is commonly used by produce dealers in preserving fresh fruits during shipment, because of its non-poisonous qualities," Mr. McWhinnie said. Mr. McWhinnie also pointed out that the General Electric refrigerators comply with the new Torrance ordinance requiring cooling devices to use gases or mixture of gases that have easily detected odors.
